PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

In 1976, the Supreme Court’s decision in TSC Industries, Inc. v. Northway, Inc. held that an omitted fact is material under the Federal securities laws if there is a substantial likelihood that a reasonable shareholder would consider it important in deciding how to vote his or her shares.¹ Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) Chair White, current Commissioners Gallagher and Piwowar, and former Commissioner Paredes have expressed their belief that investors are currently experiencing “information overload” and that the SEC needs to revamp its disclosure system. Ever-increasing amounts of disclosure make it difficult for investors to digest the information they receive and discern which information is most relevant. H.R. 4569 would direct the SEC to simplify its disclosure regime for issuers and investors by permitting issuers to submit a summary page on Form 10-K with appropriate cross-references to the content of the report. The legislation would also direct the SEC to revise Regulation S-K (Reg. S-K) within 180 days of enactment of the Act to more appropriately scale disclosure rules for emerging growth companies and smaller issuers, as well as to eliminate other duplicative, outdated, or unnecessary Reg. S-K disclosure rules for all issuers. Reg. S-K states the requirements for the content of the non-financial statement portions of regis-tion statements filed under the Securities Act of 1933 and various filings under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (Exchange Act). In addition to these revisions, H.R. 4569 would direct the SEC to further study Reg. S-K and engage in rulemaking to implement additional reforms to simplify and modernize Reg. S-K disclosure rules within 360 days of enactment of the Act.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Congress enacted the Federal securities laws following the stock market crash of 1929 primarily to ensure that “[c]ompanies publicly offering securities for investment dollars . . . tell the public the truth about their businesses, the securities they are selling, and the risks involved in investing.² In addition to the basic disclosure requirements contained in the Securities Act and the Exchange Act, the SEC has exercised its rulemaking authority over time to impose additional disclosure requirements on companies when a stock is initially sold and then on a continuing and periodic basis. As SEC Commissioner Daniel Gallagher has stated, “The SEC is first and foremost a disclosure agency.³

SEC integrated disclosure system

Prior to 1982, separate disclosure regimes applied to Securities Act registration statements and Exchange Act periodic reporting, which frequently resulted in overlapping and duplicative requirements. In 1977, the SEC’s Advisory Committee on Corporate Disclosure issued a report recommending that the SEC adopt a single integrated disclosure system that would set forth all of the SEC’s general disclosure rules and incorporate a single disclosure form. Shortly after this report was issued, the SEC adopted the first version of Reg. S-K which sets forth substantive disclosure requirements applicable to both public offerings and ongoing reporting requirements.

In 1982, the SEC adopted the integrated disclosure system “to revise or eliminate overlapping or unnecessary disclosure and dissemination requirements wherever possible, thereby reducing burdens on registrants while at the same time ensuring that security-holders, investors and the marketplace have been provided with meaningful non-duplicative information upon which to base investment decisions.⁴ In adopting the integrated disclosure system, the SEC also expanded and reorganized Reg. S-K, making it the repository for the uniform, non-financial statement disclosures filed with the SEC under both the Securities Act and the Exchange Act. In addition to Reg. S-K, Regulation S-X (Reg S-X) provides guidance on the form and content of required financial statements and specifies the footnotes and schedules that should be included in or filed with the financial statements.⁵

The Federal securities laws require publicly traded companies to disclose information on an ongoing basis. For example, U.S. public companies must submit to the SEC annual reports on Form 10-K, quarterly reports on Form 10-Q, and current reports on Form 8-K for a number of specified events and must comply with a variety of other disclosure requirements. The annual report on Form 10-K provides a comprehensive overview of the company's business and financial condition and includes audited financial statements. Although similarly named, the annual report on Form 10-K is distinct from the "annual report to shareholders," which a company must send to its shareholders when it holds an annual meeting to elect directors. Because the typical 10-K filed by an issuer with the SEC is hundreds of pages long, investors often find it difficult to derive the important information about the company. Permitting issuers to submit a summary page would enable companies to disclose pertinent information in a streamlined fashion to investors without the fear of being sued. This document would also enable investors to more easily access the most relevant information about a company.

H.R. 4569 builds on Section 108 of the Jumpstart Our Business Startups Act (JOBS Act) (P.L. 112–106), which directed the SEC to study Reg. S-K in order to simplify and modernize disclosure rules. The SEC completed this study and submitted its report to Congress in December 2013. The report includes recommendations for "potential next steps, including an outline of economic principles to consider and preliminary conclusions that can be drawn from the staff's review of the disclosure requirements.⁶ The report fails, however, to include any substantive recommendations for reforming specific outdated, duplicative, unnecessary, or overly burdensome Reg. S-K disclosure requirements.

The SEC's outmoded corporate disclosure system diverts corporate resources toward regulatory compliance and away from innovation, growth, and job creation. Moreover, this antiquated disclosure regime leads to unnecessarily long, complicated, and often immaterial public company disclosures, resulting in investor confusion and potentially suboptimal investment decisions. As Chair White and her fellow Commissioners have recently recognized, the SEC's disclosure regime must be studied and revamped for the benefit of companies and investors.

In an October 2013 speech, titled, "The Path Forward on Disclosure," Chair White stated:

Clearly, the topic of disclosure and a consideration of ways to make it better are perennial topics, as they should be. And, even though improvements have been made over the years, there is still more to consider and still, in my view, a lot more to do Although our study regarding Regulation S-K will only be the first step, it will set the stage for the dialogue and path forward toward a meaningful review of our disclosure requirements. . . . We must continuously consider whether information overload is occurring as rules proliferate and as we contemplate what should and should not be required to be disclosed going forward.⁷

Similarly, in a January 2014 speech, SEC Commissioner Michael Piwowar cited information overload in calling for a “top-to-bottom review of the Commission’s disclosure regime.”⁸ In a January 2014 speech, Commissioner Gallagher also pointed to the dangers of information overload and called for revamping the SEC’s corporate disclosure system. He stated, “Investors often say that disclosure documents are lengthy, turgid, and internally repetitive. Today’s mandated disclosure documents are no longer efficient mechanisms for clearly conveying material information to investors, particularly ordinary, individual investors—myself included. . . . The complexity of today’s disclosure requirements give [sic] the Commission cause for self-examination.”⁹ Commissioner Gallagher, however, indicated his preference for taking immediate, discrete steps to revamp clearly outdated or unnecessary SEC disclosure requirements, “rather than risk spending years preparing an offensive so massive that it may never be launched.”

H.R. 4569 will ensure that the SEC streamlines and simplifies disclosures, follows the Supreme Court’s well-established definition of materiality, and restores management discretion in identifying the material matters that should be disclosed to shareholders in periodic SEC filings.

Enclosure.

H.R. 4569—Disclosure Modernization and Simplification Act of 2014

H.R. 4569 would require the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), within 180 days of enactment, to revise certain registration and disclosure requirements for securities issuers with an aim to reduce the burden on smaller companies and to remove any duplicative or unnecessary provisions. The SEC also would be required, within 360 days of enactment, to report to the Congress on ways to further simplify those regulations and, 360 days after that, to issue a proposed rule based on the findings of the report.

Based on information from the SEC, CBO estimates that implementing H.R. 4569 would cost about $1 million over the 2015–2019 period to comply with the reporting and rulemaking requirements under the bill. The SEC is currently studying and in the process of revising certain registration and disclosure requirements, so the costs of the initial rulemaking required under the bill would not be significant. Most of the costs would be incurred to issue the report and complete a second rulemaking process. Under current law the SEC is authorized to collect fees sufficient to offset its appropriation each year; therefore, we estimate that the net cost to the SEC would be negligible, assuming appropriation action consistent with that authority. Enacting H.R. 4569 would not affect direct spending or revenues; therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures do not apply.

H.R. 4569 contains no intergovernmental mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) and would not affect the budgets of state, local, or tribal governments.

Assuming that the SEC increases fees to offset the cost of the second rulemaking that would be required by the bill, H.R. 4569 would increase the cost of an existing mandate on private entities that are required to pay those fees. Based on information from the SEC, CBO estimates that the aggregate cost of the mandate would fall well below the annual threshold for private-sector mandates established in UMRA ($152 million in 2014, adjusted annually for inflation).

The CBO staff contacts for this estimate are Michael Hirsch and Susan Willie (for federal costs) and Matthew Denneny and Patrice Gordon (for the private-sector impact). The estimate was approved by Theresa Gullo, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

FEDERAL MANDATES STATEMENT

The Committee adopts as its own the estimate of Federal mandates prepared by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office pursuant to section 423 of the Unfunded Mandates reform Act.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE STATEMENT

No advisory committees within the meaning of section 5(b) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act were created by this legislation.

APPLICABILITY TO LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

EARMARK IDENTIFICATION

H.R. 4569 does not contain any congressional earmarks, limited tax benefits, or limited tariff benefits as defined in clause 9 of rule XXI.

DUPLICATION OF FEDERAL PROGRAMS

Pursuant to section 3(j) of H. Res. 5, 113th Cong. (2013), the Committee states that no provision of H.R. 4569 establishes or re-authorizes a program of the Federal Government known to be duplicative of another Federal program, a program that was included in any report from the Government Accountability Office to Congress pursuant to section 21 of Public Law 111-139, or a program related to a program identified in the most recent Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance.
